Project-Based Learning (PBL)
Cartografía de historia personal y familiar
Ana María Juárez
Modern Language and Literature / Online Synchronous

Intent Target population
- The project aims to foster a deep understanding of cultural heritage, personal narratives, and connections within their families.
- The target population includes students with a specific interest in exploring and preserving their cultural roots.

Students Objectives
- Content Objectives: Students will learn cartographic techniques to visually represent their personal and family histories. This may involve creating maps that highlight significant geographical locations, migration routes, and cultural landmarks that hold importance to their heritage.
- Language Objectives: Students will explain in writing, vision and oral their lifetime. By using online application and target/Spanish language when presenting.

Active Learning Technique
- PBL Students share narratives from their family's past. This includes stories, traditions, and experiences that have been passed down through generations, contributing to a richer understanding of their cultural heritage.
- Interactive Presentations: The class will culminate in interactive presentations with technology applications where students showcase their cartographic projects. This provides an opportunity for them to articulate the significance of their findings, fostering communication skills and a sense of pride in their cultural heritage.

Applicable setting for techniques
- PBL Tech students to engage in reflective exercises to connect their personal histories with broader cultural themes.
- Promotes a deeper appreciation for the diversity within the class and allows students to recognize shared experiences and differences.

Students benefit and impact
- The project aims to foster a deep understanding of cultural heritage, personal narratives, and connections within their families.
- The target population includes students with a specific interest in exploring and preserving their cultural roots.
- The project has been designed for students who are ready to research into their family histories, traditions, and the cultural elements that have shaped their identities.
- Relevant for those with diverse cultural backgrounds, providing a platform for self-discovery and connection to their heritage.